TALKING ABOUT PEACE IN COLOMBIA

Last month saw the launch of peace talks between the Colombian government and the FARC aimed at ending the armed conflict that has shaken Colombia for over sixty years. Numerous peasants, afro-colombian and indigenous organizations have been working for many years to reach a political solution to the social and armed conflict and are demanding the demilitarization of civilian life. The Peace Community of San José de Apartadó, comprised of families of campesinos and campesinas, was founded in 1997 in the midst of a conflict zone in the Colombian region Urabá. It has become a symbol of non-violent resistance against war and human rights violations in Colombia. Residents' peaceful resistance has cost them dearly: approximately 200 of their members have been killed by different armed forces.

We cordially invite you to view the film and discover the Peace Community and their model of pacifist alternatives.
